Here is the latest update from the City of Tarpon:

The EASTERN half of Mango Street will be CLOSED DOWN starting

EARLY October through FEBRUARY 2024.

The road will be CLOSED TO THROUGH TRAFFIC and OPEN FOR LOCAL TRAFFIC ONLY. _

Stonehedge Residents should expect to have LIMITED ACCESS from North Gate during construction.

Jo Ann Campbell, # 146

Hi from the North Atlantic!

The ship is now travelling west as we make our way back home, with only two weeks left!

Djupivogur(pronounced Jupigur!), Iceland, a town of only 450 people, is nestled in a fiord of Iceland, skyline dominated by a pyramid shaped mountain. The dependency primarily on a thriving fishing industry is evident in the vessels in the harbour as well as the expanding fish processing plant and the building of a pipeline to take the fish waste to tanks further out of town for disposal rather than dumping into the sea. We were so delighted to walk among the homes and greet the local people in a natural setting with none of the big city tourism hype. The increasing influx of tourists and of vehicles is causing a sidewalk to be built to keep it safer for us.

Reykjavik, the capital city of Iceland , and the surrounding countryside, typifies the expression "A Land Of Ice And Fire". The first day spent here took us to a geothermal power plant, an awesome waterfall, a field of bubbling hot springs and geysers, and a UNESCO World Heritage Site where the first known parliament in the world was held. Only photos can do justice to these sites and the eight hour bus trip! On day two, the Hop On Hop Off bus was our choice for travel, getting off at the majestic modernistic Lutheran church.

The return to Prince Christian Sound, Greenland, was as astounding with its views as it was going west to east earlier in this trip. The Captain was able to get us to within meters of the largest glacier we saw. There were still many icebergs in the water at this mid point of August. The Danish Ice Pilots kept us safe! QQaqortuq(Kakortuk pronunciation!) was the northernmost port for this journey. The friendly welcoming people of this town are mostly Inuit, looking very much like the Inuit of Canada. Fishing again dominates the livelihood of these northern people. The fairly large presence of young people working, as well as three or four large school buildings, would indicate that there is enough to keep them here. The homes and the public buildings are all brightly coloured. Until the 1950's, these colours were used to indicate the purpose of the building or employment of the inhabitant.

Back to Newfoundland, going first to St. Anthony and then to St. Johns. Twenty minutes outside of St. Anthony is the only known settlement of Vikings, in North America, established by Leif Erikson, in the 900's I think. Today, the townspeople rely still on fishing for a living. A well-loved and well-revered figure in Canadian history is Dr. Grenfell. This British physician missionary spent his life dedicated to improving the many aspects of the lives of the people of Newfoundland and Labrador. There are many signs of his memory being honoured in St. Anthony.

St. Johns is the capital of Newfoundland Labrador. Of course, there are government buildings here, both new and old. This province joined Canada in 1949. The several churches are beautiful examples of the architecture from the periods in which they were built. To truly survive walking around in this city, you have to be part mountain goat. It is a constant up and downhill trek, made even more challenging in the rain. This city's downtown is highlighted by street after street of colourful row housing, mostly of three stories. To really feel at home, we visited the Tim Horton's for apple fritters, coffee, and a coke!

The final port on this memorable voyage was Halifax, Nova Scotia. Having been here a few times, we strolled the wonderful Harbor Boardwalk and then made our way uphill for a LONG way to reach the Public Gardens. The peace and beauty was well worth the climb!

So, farewell for now. We plan to visit you "LIVE" some Wednesday in November at the clubhouse. We will share with you the many sights of Greenland and Iceland at that time! Hope to see you then!

SOUTH-BOUND

Well, here we go again. Fall begins officially tomorrow at 2:50 AM. The Adirondacks of NYS are known for their spectacular displays of autumnal foliage, but there's a catch: it doesn't always happen. Sometimes, the Maples and the Birches and the Beeches seem not to have gotten the memo, and the "Leaf Peepers" who have paid good money to the transit companies and the travel agencies, are faced with a lot of green conifers and not much else. Lots of theories abound as to why the colors are so vibrant some years and so boring in others (how much rain fell and when, whether or not there have been enough frosts, for example) but the weather folks don't really seem to be able to predict what the leaf season will look like any better than us amateurs. As we write this column, there is still a preponderance of green, but that can change very quickly. We're hoping it will, before we head south in early October. In any case, we'll see you soon.
